little people n. wánⁿshige šuwéñe (I); wanⁿsiñe šuwéñe (O); wanáxiyiñe ~ wanáxiyiñe. [NOTE: These are spirits who live in the woods, around cliffs, rock formations and caves. Non-natives often refer to them as "brownies or elves." They are not spoken of frequently, but most persons are aware of them. They are small and never known to be taller than one's knees. They are said to be helpful, kindhearted, have love for music and dancing that matches their gentle nature, but they do not like to be disturbed. Some have said that they exist to show people to live in harmony with nature and others. Yet, they may also be mischievous, playing tricks on people.

One of their lessons they share is that one is not to do things or be hurtful to others, as it will come back to the person doing it. Also, one needs to respect the limitations and area of others; and do not take the world too seriously. And always have joy and share that joy with others; whatever one does for others is to be done with goodness without personal gain, and that one does not obligate the receiver.

"It is said that there is a place south of Pawnee (Oklahoma) at a crossroads where the little people visit anyone who stops there in the middle of the night. Whatever you ask of them, it's said, they'll provide it as long as it is not something selfish, but I was afraid to go and find out if it was really true (MT)."
